agendas and patronly tastes may have coloured al-Gāḥig's analysis in particular epistles; 15 and we ought to exercise further caution in interpreting his texts at face value, for, in addition to the sarcasm and tongue-in-cheek sometimes apparent in his style, al-Gāḥig wrote in polemical genres which fostered exaggeration and embellishment at the expense of sober discourse.

It has been noted that al-Gāḥiz was singularly influenced by discourses emanating from the genre al-Maḥāsin wa-l-Masāwi' (good versus bad traits) which used dialectic as a means of analysis whereby everything is imagined to be relative and all ideas could be called into question.

Gériés has suggested how al-Gāḥiz used this methodology to good effect in his theological writings³⁰ and it appears that al-Gāḥiz may have engaged in a similar logic regarding ethnicities. He is known to have written several contradictory pieces about peoples of the world: consider for instance a (now lost) work in praise of the South Arabian Qaḥṭān tribal group²³, and an antithetical text praising the specific merits of their rivals, the North Arabian 'Adnān over Qaḥṭān.²² Al-Gāḥiz's slaves) as 'disorganised rabble' (Bayûn, 1: 137) and belittled their condition visa-vis other peoples (Bayûn, 1: 384). In a separate, polemical essay entitled Faib al-sidān 'alā I-būjān, however, he argued their merits, describing the Zanj in entirely positive terms (Rasā'āl, 1: 173–226, particularly 195–9).

18 Noted by J. Lassner regarding Manāgāb al-Tavk (Virtues of the Turks) entirely positive terms (Rusa'il, 1: 173–226, particularly 195–9).

¹⁸ Noted by J. Lussner regarding Manāqib al-Turk (Virtues of the Turks) which al-Gibliz dedicated to the powerful Turkic wazīr al-Fath ibn Ḥāqān (Rusa'il, 3: 163; J. Lussner, The Shaping, 119–120); and Pellat proposed that al-Gibig's al-Rusal' alid al-naşāra (Rebuttal against Christians) was written for the Caliph al-Mutawakkil during a period of official anti-Christian sentiment (Le Milleu Bayries, 231).

The TÃA said that you would possibly have her trip to the bazaar for that night. So when he asked for permission to go to the bazaar, the unblus was surprised at night because the child did not like the crowd, and he suspected if he had been involved in some mason (that is, a world -world secret society that had anti-Católicos inclinations) to affirm The light from the opposite side of her lasted the white curve of her neck, turned on her hair that fell on her, and threw her hand as he rested on the sweep.
